The immunopathogenesis of inflammatory bowel disease (IBD) involves complex interactions among innate and adaptive immune cells, mast cells, and epithelial cells. It is vital to understand these mechanisms to develop therapies for patients with IBD and improve the outcome of animal models of IBD that mimic human disease. However, the complexities of the immune system and the need to study interactions in vivo have required a shift from studying the individual components of the immune system toward studying their interactions. Recent advances in microarray technology have permitted the identification of thousands of transcripts that are differentially expressed in the inflamed versus uninvolved intestine of experimental mouse models of IBD. In this article, we review some of these findings and discuss their potential relevance to the pathogenesis of IBD in humans.

Floyd Mayweather Jr. vs. Manny Pacquiao: Best Money Team Mayweather has spent his entire career to the biggest audience in sports, flaunting his post-fight celebration while trying to build his legacy. It's all taken to another level against Pacquiao.

There isn't a need to sugar coat the relative grandeur of a Floyd Mayweather Jr. pay-per-view fight. If you're familiar with the career of Mayweather, you know the super-legend isn't going to be easy to stop on fight night in Las Vegas. And he had a way to create a history-making pay-per-view event on Saturday night in Australia. With the rivalry between he and Manny Pacquiao largely played out over the course of five professional fights, there was plenty of attention focused on the world welterweight champion's trainer, the always reliable and on-point Mayweather disciple, Floyd Sr., leading him in the corner for his first showdown with Pacquiao. Following his public victory over Pacquiao in Las Vegas earlier this year — which saw
